Celebrating Our 2025 Environmental Champions

Each year, Aquarion's Environmental Champion Awards recognize dedicated volunteers who help safeguard and improve Connecticut's natural environment. On June 7, this year's winners were celebrated during a special ceremony at Connecticut's Beardsley Zoo.

The awards in this year's categories went to:

ASML (Large Business)

For ASML, leading the semiconductor industry in lithography technology goes hand in hand with a bold commitment to sustainability, aiming for greenhouse gas neutrality by 2040 through energy-efficient innovations, renewable energy adoption, and circular practices across its global operations.

Enfield Scuba and Watersports (Mid-Size Business)

For over 20 years, Enfield Scuba and Watersports has championed environmental education and marine conservation in Connecticut through inclusive community programs, hands-on training, and impactful events like lake cleanups and endangered species awareness campaigns.

Norwalk River Watershed Association (Non-Profit)

For nearly three decades, the Norwalk River Watershed Association has empowered communities through volunteer-led restoration, environmental advocacy, and education to protect and revitalize the Norwalk River watershed in southwestern Connecticut.

Chris Schipper (Adult)

For over 15 years, New Canaan native Chris Schipper has been a visionary force in environmental conservation, transforming the New Canaan

Land Trust, spearheading landmark preservation projects, and inspiring community engagement through nature-focused initiatives that connect people—especially youth—to the natural world.

Zoe Wu (Student)

For her leadership and tireless dedication to conservation, Zoe Wu is inspiring a new generation of environmental stewards through youth engagement, hands-on education, and advocacy that is already shaping a more sustainable future for Connecticut.
